THAW

Amazing Story Developed in Testimony To-day of Extraordinary Actions Preceding Shooting of Stanford White—Facts Not Brought Out at First Trial.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—Harry K. Thaw tried to have three cigarettes locked up in a safe, had screens placed about him in warm June weather, cried out, "This is awful," after phoning for an hour all this and a great deal more that indicated insanity took place on the day of the evening he shot Stanford White on the roof of Madison Square Garden.

This happened at the Whit Club, Two Hundred and Sixty-fifth street and Madison avenue. It was there that Thaw met Gleason, one of the lawyers who represented him at the last trial. The evidence, now given at the last trial, came to day from the lips of Christopher Briggins, steward of the club.

Condition on Day of Tragedy

Thaw, it came out, was in the habit of playing whist in the club with such men as John W. Gates, Charles M. Schwab and Lawyer Gleason. Jerome was unable to find out whether they played for money or not. He appeared on June 25 (the tragedy took place that evening) at the club at 11 o'clock that morning. He was pale, his eyes glazed, his mouth twitched, and when the steward fondled him on the shoulder to tell him there was a call on the telephone Thaw jumped as though he had been shot.

"Telling all these things has cost me," Miss Faye about the facts? "A— I don't know," said Mr. Thaw, "could you say that?"
